

Abuse in Teenage Relationships

Background

The prevention of violence against women and girls is a national and local priority. Domestic abuse has been seen in the past as individual acts of behaviour, when it is often about a pattern of power and control over time.

The highest rate of reported domestic violence is for people between the age of 16 and 25. However, NSPCC research has found that 13 to 15 year olds are as likely as older teenagers to experience relationship abuse. This one day course aims to equip professionals with the understanding to identify young people at risk and support disclosure.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the training, participants will:

- Have gained an understanding of current research findings in relation to the prevalence and nature of domestic abuse between young people.
- Explored some of the reasons why it is difficult for young people to recognise and disclose abuse in relationships.
- Understand some of the ways in which young people may behave in response to abuse.
- Understand the importance of child protection measures and working with other relevant agencies.
