

Safeguarding Children from Honour Based Abuse and Forced Marriage

Background

So-called honour-based violence is an international term used by many cultures for the justification of abuse and violence. Honour-based abuse can go hand in hand with forced marriages, affecting young men and young women. The national Violence Against Women and Girls \(VAWG\) Strategy has identified honour-based violence and forced marriage as a focus, as the very nature of it increases the likelihood of this abuse going underreported.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course participants will:

- Understand the definitions of honour-based abuse and forced marriage and the impact on children.
- Have explored cultural issues and community beliefs regarding honour and marriage and the differences between “arranged” and “forced” marriage.
- Be able to recognise forms of honour-based abuse and identify risk indicators in an agency setting.
- Be able to identify practice issues with regard to cultural sensitivity, community beliefs and religion.
- Gain an understanding of the Forced Marriage Protection Orders and criminal legislation.
- Have looked at case examples.
- Be aware of the local safeguarding referral processes and both national and local support agencies.
